

city a short commute from New Jersey and Connecticut.

According to Schwartz, "There is no typical Cardozo student." Yet, one trend common to most Cardozo students is their heavy involvement in extracurricular activities. For those with a literary bent, Cardozo has eight publications, covering such diverse topics as women's issues, international and comparative law, and arts and entertainment. Additionally, Cardozo is an innovator in the field of job placement. With the help of students and faculty, it established the nation's first Mediation Clinic, where students gain experience in third-party regulation, specifically by lawyers, of personal conflicts through open communication. Furthermore, legal experience and community service are integrated in the Bet Tzedek Legal Service Clinic. In this unique program, students represent elderly and disabled clients in civil government cases, under the supervision of the clinical faculty.

In the past twenty years, Cardozo Law School has gained prominence in the legal community and has established itself as an enticing choice to those interested in a career in law. The appeal of such a school has been expressed by those who have settled in at Cardozo and claim that their school offers the best of both worlds: a dedicated institution located in the cultural center of the world.

Author Biography

Julie L. Barns is a junior at Columbia College majoring in Sharon Chase is a first year at Barnard College.

Joel B. Finkelstein is a senior majoring in political science at Columbia College.

Danielle Ilacqua is a senior at Barnard College majoring in Political Science.

Nicholas Kulish is a senior at Columbia College majoring in Political Science.

Timothy J. McCarthy is a doctoral candidate and research fellow at Columbia University, where he will serve from 1997-1999 as Instructor in History and African-American Studies. The author of a biweekly opinion column, he is also managing editor of Race & Reason.

Michael Pignatello is a senior at Columbia College majoring in Political Science.

Jackie Sadker is a senior at Columbia College majoring in Political Science.

Rebecca Smeyne is a first year at Columbia College.

David Schmook is in the General Studies program at Columbia University.

Clarette Yen is a senior at Columbia College majoring in Political Science.

Xiao Yin Zhao is a senior at Barnard College majoring in Economics and East Asian Languages and Cultures.